

The Father finding that little Giles was inclined to be good, and to learn, made him a Book of Gingerbread, which he was very fond of, and learned it as fast as he could. In the Evening, when Casser Gingerbread came home, he found that Giles had eat up one Corner of his Book, at which he was not well pleased. Heyday, Giles, says he, what do you love Learning so well as to eat up your Book? Why Father, says Giles, I am not the only Boy who has eat his Words. No Boy loves his Book better than I do, but I always learn it before I eat it. Say you so, quoth the Father, pray let me hear you say your Lesson. Ay, Father, says Giles, you shall hear me sing it, so up he struck, b-a, ba, b-e, be, b-i, bi, and sung the whole Cuzzes Chorus, which the sly Rogue had got out of Mr. Newbery's pretty Play-Thing. His Father, however, was wonderfully pleased to see the Boy so apt and ingenious, and therefore gave him another Book; on the learning of which, he told him, much of his Happiness would depend, and this was the Title.

How

How to be Happy and go to Heaven. And this was the Book, at least the Lessons contained in it.

1 Lesson. Always rejoice at the good of others, that you may be happy for he that is pleased at another's prosperity, enjoys a Part of his good.

2 Lesson. Every Man is as well or as miserable as he thinks himself; therefore think yourself happy, Giles, that you may be so.

3 Lesson. Love the Lord with all your Heart, with all your Soul, and with all your Strength; for you cannot love him half so well as he loves you.

4 Lesson. Love your Neighbour as you love yourself; that is, love him as much as you love yourself. Giles, be kind to him, and his Welfare, that he may prove so to you.

5 Lesson. Love and pray for your Enemies, Giles, that your Enemies may become Friends, and love and pray for you.

6 Lesson. And my dear Giles, pray for the Prayers Night and Morning, and be honest in your Dealings; and be charitable.
